Trustees of Hampden-Sydney College not only going coed, but they vowed they would more directly market the college's unique niche.
President Samuel V. Wilson said trustees "voted decisively" that the 221-year old institution in Farmville, should remain all male. There are only two other all-male private schools in the country: Wabash in Crawfordsville, Ind., and Morehouse in Atlanta.
Trustees feel the single-sex arrangement "is still attractive."

An All-Male College Will Stay That Way
RICHMOND, Aug. 20 (AP) — James Madison and Patrick Henry helped establish Hampden-Sydney College in 1776 as an all-male institution. The college's governing board decided today to keep it that way.
The trustees of the private college had considered admitting women to help recruit students. Instead, the 25-member board unanimously rejected the idea, choosing instead to reject the college more aggressively.
"We believe there's a niche market of young men out there who prefer a single-gender education," said the college president.
There are women in the profession, Madison said, but one of our colleges is in the college in Morehouse. The fact that Virginia is the only state to have a single-sex college is a source of pride.

CHRISTOPHER BISHOP '95
Former President of the Union-Philanthropic Society

THE FIRST GREAT CHRONICLER of the College's history—Herbert C. Bradshaw 1930—once suggested that the fabled success of Hampden-Sydney's sons might best be explained by their preparation not only in the classroom, but especially in the halls of the College's ancient literary societies. “From the debate topics on current issues, both domestic and foreign, it is evident that Hampden-Sydney students did not live in isolation from the world of affairs,” he noted. “Students were encouraged to think for themselves and to use the knowledge they were acquiring as a tool for formulating independent judgment.”

While Mr. Bradshaw was hardly an impartial witness—he served as the first president of the unified Union-Philanthropic Society during his senior year—his observations were hardly exaggerated. The most prominent men in the College's history, from Samuel Stanhope Smith to Graves Haydon Thompson, all boast connections to the old Union Society, or to its younger sister, the Philanthropic. In fact, in reviewing the rolls of Hampden-Sydney's most illustrious alumni—whether they include the President, the Governors, the Legislators, the Ambassadors; or the Scholars, the Doctors, the Planters, and the Merchants—it is hard to find many who did not first sharpen their skills as members of one society or the other.

In many ways, that is still the Society's most useful function: it gives future leaders practice in public speaking, mental perspicacity, and the ability to argue effectively—essential skills not only for jobs in the public service arena but for occupations in any station of life. The Union-Philanthropic Society is not only an essential part of training in the liberal arts, it is also invaluable vocational preparation. While all students can benefit from this training, it is particularly applicable to those in the College's new public service program.

The second oldest literary and debating organization in America, the Union Society was established in 1789. Edward Henry, the eldest son of Patrick Henry, and William Henry Harrison, “Old Tippecanoe,” were among its earliest members. A decade and a half later, another group of no less eminent young men—including John Peter Mettauer, the redoubtable surgeon, and Walter Coles, later the Governor of Illinois—founded a rival group: the Philanthropic Society.

Throughout the nineteenth century, and well into the twentieth, the Union and the “Phip” dominated virtually all aspects of student life at Hampden-Sydney. Before there were fraternities, the literary societies promoted life-long friendships, and before there was a Macon game, the Societies' Intermediate Celebration was the social event of the year.

Yet the literary societies were never mere social organizations; they always retained their founders' commitment to greater things. Until the beginning of this century, the Societies' own library dwarfed the College's meager collection. As early as 1850, the two groups founded Hampden-Sydney's first periodical, the Hampden-Sydney Magazine, ancestor of today's Garnet:

forty years later, they organized the first yearbook. For decades, the Societies' own officers punished offending members for everything from tardiness to murder—and held jury trials long before the advent of the student-run Honor Court.

Since the two old rivals were forced to merge in 1929, there has been a temptation to view the Union-Philanthropic as a relic from some bygone era: it once was grand, but alas, no more. Students, it seems, have changed a lot since the eighteenth century, and any literary society now seems predestined to languish in a dull obscurity. Certainly, in the past few decades, there have been only a few fleeting sparks of hope to contradict this general impression of torpor. Thus, while some observers may regard the Society's recent growth—with some justification—as nothing more than breathing by the comatose, it may indeed be more: it might be a new beginning.

In 1992, the Society moved out of the cramped quarters of the Birthplace, into the Patrick Henry Room, on the second floor of Winston Hall. Rechristened Union-Philanthropic Hall, the room now serves not only as an area for the Society's weekly meetings, but also as a library for the members, a work place for the officers, and a site for Society receptions. The vestiges of the Society's once vast collection of furnishings and portraits, including the antique Union Society "throne," or officers' podium, have also been removed to the new Hall. More importantly, however, the quantity and quality of the membership have increased significantly from 1990—when only two members remained—to 1995, when eleven new men joined the six returning members.

Both to ensure the continued involvement of these new members, and to guide them in the development of their rhetorical skills, the Society recently established a formal membership process, outlined in a new Constitution. Meetings have been streamlined to accelerate the consideration of business, and to maximize the time for substantive discussion. As always, the topics and formats of the weekly programs have tested the members' skills on an array of issues, from Plato's Apology to the baseball strike. New members have addressed topics as diverse as pulp movies, Orthodox Christianity, and the new government of South Africa. The popularity of the Society's public presentations has also increased, with large crowds attending recent events like a panel discussion on homosexuals in the military; a lecture on the crisis in Haiti by the former U.S. Ambassador, William B. Jones; and a debate on feminist perspectives of sex, power, and pornography.

Yet while the Union-Philanthropic continues to offer Hampden-Sydney an unequalled forum for free discussion, the Society has also begun to provide students with unique opportunities for meeting with the faculty, interacting with students from neighboring colleges, and visiting cultural attractions across Virginia. Honorary members—both among the alumni and in the faculty—often attend the Sunday evening debates, providing a different viewpoint on the issues and creating a rich atmosphere for intellectual exchange. In a more relaxed setting, the members frequently enjoy the company of faculty, administrators, and staff at tea, held each week in the Hall. Reviving the old traditions of the Intermediate and Final Celebrations, the Society again sponsors a banquet following the public programs, enabling members, honorary members, and special guests to continue the afternoon's discussions well into the evening.

The Society has also been active off the Hill. A delegation of several members recently visited the University of North Carolina for a debate with that institution's literary societies, in celebration of their bicentennial. Excursions have also been organized to the homes of honorary members Patrick Henry, James Madison, and Robert E. Lee, as well as to other historic sites throughout the Commonwealth. In a fitting symbol of the Society's permanence at Hampden-Sydney, as well as its new vitality, an Anniversary Oak was recently planted near the Bell Tower, commemorating the founding of the Union Society some two centuries ago.

Pessimists, however, will always find little hope in the most promising of situations, and certainly the Society's attempts at expansion have not been easy. Student tastes have undoubtedly changed over the past two hundred years, and it does not seem that the Society will ever again comprise 95% of the student body. The atrophy of the past seventy years has reduced the Society from its once privileged position as the dominant intellectual and social force on campus to simply another student club. It has now become dependent on the College that it once sustained, while the mere mention of its name continues to draw blank stares from too many students, faculty, and staff. Tremendous progress has been made over the past five years, but much work remains to be done, if the current renaissance is to be more than a temporary burst of energy. The challenge is great: the Union-Philanthropic must not only be revived, but actually reconstructed. The best traditions and principles of the old days must be carried forth, while precious new ideas are rounded up and harnessed. It is not merely a matter of providing the College a forum for public discussion, or serving the interests of a few dedicated students; it is not even about preserving an old and venerable organization. As Mr. Bradshaw would have it, the necessity is one of fulfilling the College's mission to form good men and good citizens, whose success relies not only on the lessons of the classroom, but moreover upon the ability to think clearly, argue coherently, and speak for cefully on any subject. Hampden-Sydney College can hardly hope to produce its next President, its next lawyer, or its next CEO—or any gentleman competent to function in this republic—without first teaching him to participate in public discussion. There is no better means to teach this skill than the Union-Philanthropic Society.

As it has always been, the continued existence and vitality of the Union-Philanthropic is critical to the continued existence and vitality of Hampden-Sydney; the strength of one relies upon strength of the other. While the Society is thriving, its essential role in the life of the College has not been fully realized by the students or administration. The Society has been reconstructed. Along with the new rite of membership, the old, nineteenth century constitution has been revived. New members take an oath to literature and friendship. There is no other organization on campus that provides as stimulating an intellectual and social environment. No other organization on campus is better suited to teach, in an environment of friendship, the College's sons the arts of debate and public speaking. The Society will continue to grow and thrive, but only with the support of its friends, alumni, current members, and the

Catching the American Dream

By Eunice Carwile

WHAT EXACTLY IS THE AMERICAN Dream? Beginning on January 23, Hampden-Sydney took on an interdisciplinary study of the promise of America to its people. Has the Dream changed since the first explorers sought room to grow and freedom to live? Does the Dream have the same meaning for everyone? Is the Dream still alive? Among the visitors who attempted to answer these questions were Frederick Marx, director of the award-winning film Hoop Dreams; Scott Sanders, essayist and author of Writing from the Center; Dith Pran, New York Times photographer and subject of The Killing Fields; and Edward Albee, three-time Pulitzer-Prize-winning playwright who crafted such works as Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf and Three Tall Women. Film and lecture series, a one-act play festival, and musical performances filled the semester.

The symposium commenced with a reenactment of the way America itself began. On January 23, a group of 20 faculty members and students in 18th-century costume debated whether—and how—"these united Colonies" should become "Free and Independent States." They ended up not ratifying the Declaration of Independence as adopted by the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776 (half a year after Hampden-Sydney began to educate good men and good citizens) but declaring the symposium Open and Under Way.

The first film to be shown in the American Dream Symposium, Hoop Dreams is an award-winning documentary that follows two African Americans, both talented basketball players, from age 13 through college. In part about the athletes' dreams of being recruited by the NBA, the film goes far beyond the story of a quest in its revelations about the victories and heartbreaks of being a student and an African American. Hoop Dreams was shown on January 23. On the following night, Frederick Marx, the film's director, discussed the twists of fate behind the making of this epic chronicle, and the insights it gives about the American Dream.

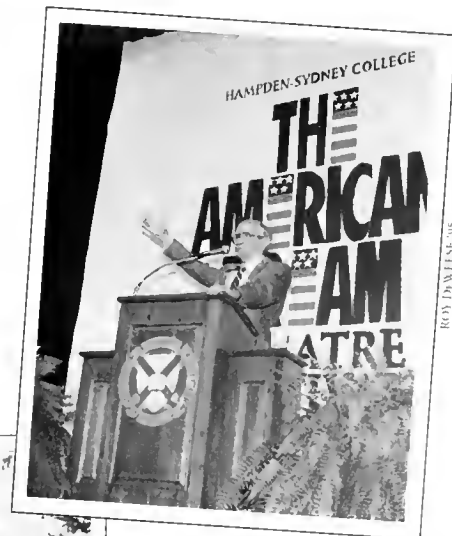

At the end of the first week of the Symposium, we turned to those who are, in a way, still discovering America. Professors Paul Jagasich, Andrzej Rusewicz, and other new Americans held a faculty roundtable discussion, "The American Dream: An Immigrant's View."

Scott Sanders, writer and essayist, talked about writing (and signed copies of his award-winning book, Writing from the Center) on February 14. That evening, he delivered a public talk, "The Dream of Common Ground." Sanders, who recently won Indiana University's highest teaching award and the Alumni Association's Distinguished Faculty Award, has published fiction and essays in national magazines and newspapers.

A classical musician by training who has performed at the White House and at Carnegie Hall, Pianist Paul Posnak is equally famous for his renderings of jazz. On February 21, Posnak brought that distinctly American art form to Hampden-Sydney with his performance-lecture about the music of George Gershwin and Fats Waller; on February 22, he performed pieces by Gershwin, Waller, William Bolcom, Ernesto Nazareth, Heitor Villa-Lobos, and Scott Joplin.

THE ONE-ACT PLAY FESTIVAL of the American Dream began on February 28. In the first night, Hampden-Sydney students performed Waiting for Lefty, by Clifford Odets, a play that chronicles the violent 1933 taxi strike in New York City; it is Odets's masterpiece. Emiko Tamagawa performed her play, Living in Infamy, about the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II. And Hampden-Sydney players presented Excited Domestic Insurrection, "an original experimental theatre piece" that confronts the militia movement as a warped outgrowth of the American Dream. Conceived by David Kaye, the experimental piece was actually created by the student cast.

On February 29, Longwood College and the Alpha Psi Omega drama society presented The American Dream, an absurdist one-act that its creator Edward Albee calls "an attack on the substitution of artificial for real values in our society." Hampden-Sydney was graced that evening by the appearance of Albee himself, three-time Pulitzer-Prize-winning playwright, who lectured after the performance.

On March 1, Randolph-Macon College players performed the world premiere of Surreal Estate, by Deane Browell; in this new comedy, a mother and son take the ultimate turn for the worse in their failed attempt to realize the American Dream. That same evening, Hampden-Sydney actors performed Excited Domestic Insurrection a second time; and Randolph-Macon students presented the world premiere of Where Have All the Lightning Bugs Gone? a story of love in the face of war, by Lewis E. Catron.

On March 7, saxophone virtuoso Harvey Pittel performed in concert. Offering classic European works and rarely-heard American pieces, he was accompanied by pianist and fine arts professor James Kidd.

Dith Pran, a photographer for the New York Times and a survivor of the mid-'70s reign of terror in Cambodia, lectured on March 12. Pran's story inspired the Academy-Award-winning film, The Killing Fields, about the seizure of the Cambodian government by the militant political group Khmer Rouge and the subsequent extermination of a million Cambodian citizens, mostly professionals like Pran. (Evidence exists that the reign of terror is not over; the murder, in March, of Dr. Huang Ngor, who played Pran in the film, was attributed by some experts to the Khmer Rouge.) Pran reflected on his harrowing experiences and related them to his new life and dreams as an American citizen. The Killing Fields was screened the night before Pran's lecture.

On March 14, Dr. Martin E. Marty, Fairfax M. Cone Distinguished Service Professor at the University of Chicago, presented two lectures about the American Dream: "Dreaming the American Dream—Religiously" and "Being Civil About Religion and Being Religious About Civility in Political Debate." Dr. Marty teaches on three faculties at the University of Chicago, edits three religious periodicals, is senior editor of the weekly Christian Century and the newsletter Context, and is co-editor of the quarterly journal Church History. Past president of the American Academy of Religion, he has been honored by the two oldest scholarly societies in the United States, the American Philosophical Society and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

On March 28, Dr. Paul G. Pierpaoli '84, visiting assistant professor of history, talked about how advertising affected and reflected the American culture from 1900 through the Great Depression, in his talk, "Selling the American Dream: Advertising and Cultural Imperialism in the Age of Mickey Mouse." In the early 20th century, said Pierpaoli, advertising abused the American Dream to sell products abroad, creating a kind of cultural imperialism; during the Depression, symbols (like FDR and Mickey Mouse) were used to prop up the American Dream when it seemed to be under attack.

On April 9, Professor of Classics and College Historian John L. Brinkley presented "Such Stuff As Dreams Are Made On," a lecture affirming that Hampden-Sydney College was designed to promote the American Dream as Alexis de Tocqueville had described it.

The semester's events in the Symposium on the American Dream culminated, on April 17, in another world premiere: a multi-media cantata written by composer Benjamin Broening and performed by the Hampden-Sydney Glee Club, with narration by President Samuel Wilson and fine arts professor David Kaye. Broening's work, "A Dream Deferred," featured, in addition to music, taped excerpts of political speeches, interviews, and poems, visual images and texts, and narratives to place the words and images in historical context. The production was a query: whether the most basic tenet of the American Dream—the belief in the rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—has been sustained, and whether we as Americans still possess and share those rights.

"A combination of pressure and concern"

By Eunice Carwile

A FELLOW IN THE NATURAL sciences, Dr. William F. Egelhoff, Jr. '71 is a research chemist in the Surface & Microanalysis Science Division of the National Institute of Standards and Technology. He conducts research in thin-metal films and metal surfaces, and recently has been collaborating with scientists from Motorola Corporation to develop a new type of computer chip based on magnetic memory elements. But he avoids talking about his work to general audiences, for fear of boring them with descriptions of esoteric methods like molecular-beam epitaxy (a method of layering atom-thin films of matter) or processes like catalysis. When he took his turn at addressing students on Monday, March 11, he chose instead to tell them about graduate school at Cambridge University.

The question on most students' minds when they think of undertaking graduate work abroad, he said, is whether they will be able to compete with other students from all over the world. His answer to that doubt: "There's absolutely no question that you can. If you've done reasonably well at Hampden-Sydney, you'll fit in just fine at Cambridge or anywhere else."

These words of encouragement were from the man who entered Hampden-Sydney "near the bottom" of his freshman class. Before he came here, none of his teachers held any hope for Bill Egelhoff's future. "In high school, they didn't think I was ever going to amount to anything," he recalls. "My grades were miserable; I had no academic interests. When I went in to talk to the guidance counselor about college, she said, 'You know, Bill, if you want to go to college, we could probably find some college that would take you.'"

He admits frankly that he came to Hampden-Sydney in 1967 because he thought "it was the best place I had a chance of getting into." It was here, however, that the laws of momentum began to take effect: the energetic but unmotivated student collided with the enthusiasm of Porterfield, Sipe, and other professors. "I could see that they really loved their work and had a natural ability to communicate that enthusiasm," he says of his mentors. "But they also had a way of shaming you a little bit to get you going. It was as if they were saying, 'Now, you're going to make us proud of you, aren't you, Bill?'"

It was the "combination of pressure and concern" (positive momentum) that gave Egelhoff the push he needed. From earning the first A of his life in Porterfield's chemistry class, he went on to design, as his senior project, a computer program for self-consistent-field molecular-orbital calculations. By the time he was ready to choose a graduate school, he could have been accepted at Cornell or Princeton.

"On a lark," he applied to Cambridge University, and was accepted. While there, he designed and built one of the first successful helium-discharge lamps for photoelectron spectroscopy of surfaces. After earning his Ph.D. in physical chemistry from Cambridge in 1975, he was a Research Fellow with the California Institute of Technology and, later, Associate Senior Research Fellow in the Physics Department of General Motors Research Laboratories. At Cal Tech, he was part of the US-USSR Exchange Program in Catalysis; at General Motors he contributed to applied studies in exhaust-gas sensors, chlorofluorocarbon emissions, and other research. He has written or contributed to more than 90 publications in the field, delivered more than 100 talks, and won three awards from NIST. He is a Fellow of the American Physical Society and a member of the American Vacuum Society and the Materials Research

Society.

As far as Egelhoff is concerned, his journey has simply followed one of the laws of physics: "At Hampden-Sydney, they gave me the kick in the tail. The rest for me has just been conservation of momentum."

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY GAVE Dr. Lee Anderson Jackson, Jr. '69 a different kind of push, one that obeyed not a physical law but the principles of what he has since named "The Art History Theory of Education." A native of Alexandria, he had visited the National Gallery of Art so many times that he took for granted the masterpieces on its walls. After he had sat through a few of Dr. Graves Thompson's art history classes, however, he visited the Gallery again and, for the first time, saw the "deeper meaning" in the Matisse and Renoirs and Velasquezes. Education is important to life, he realized right then, "because it causes you to notice things."

Until then, Jackson had thought his visual disability more physical than perceptual. He had come to Hampden-Sydney partly because he knew Frank D. Costenbader, M. D., '25, a pioneer in the field of pediatric ophthalmology. Dr. Costenbader had performed six of the surgeries that Jackson, born with congenital cataracts, had required as a child. When it was time to choose a college, he decided to go where his hero Dr. Costenbader had been educated.

Once here, Jackson found that the place great enough to produce the likes of Dr. Costenbader was also small enough to allow him to get his own start. "The professors told me the names of textbooks they were going to use, so that I could get them taped before the semester began. And they would describe what was on the blackboard for me if I had trouble seeing it," he says, gazing through thick lenses at the past risen before him. "But, in general they were just accessible—actually, my disability became a non-issue. In that way, Hampden-Sydney was a good transition from high school to graduate school."

The new vision of education and life engendered by art history was further illuminated by Hampden-Sydney's "alive and lively" professors, who taught him "the joy of learning and problem-solving." Among them was his first psychology professor, Dr. Thomas E. DeWolfe, also a freshman of sorts, teaching his first class at Hampden-Sydney. DeWolfe introduced Jackson to the nascent field of psychology. "It was then that I knew what I wanted to do," Jackson recalls. "Psychology offered me an opportunity to have a greater diversity of occupations—I could teach or work in a professional capacity. And, frankly, I was fascinated by people's behavior. Besides," he adds, as if the joke were on him, "a counselor had told me that I couldn't be a minister because I wasn't nearly pushy enough."

After earning his Master's and doctorate at the University of Florida, Jackson joined the faculty at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington; he was made a full professor of psychology in 1985. As Chair of the Department of Psychology (since 1991), he leads 25 full-time faculty in the pursuit of "a diversity of ideas, from how a neuron fires in the brain to the life of Henry Miller." He is praised by colleagues for his scholarship, teaching skills, and leadership, and voted by students every year as the professor having the most profound effect on their education. He is author or co-author of book chapters, books, and scholarly articles, and a reviewer for the American Psychologist, Computers in Human Behavior, and other journals.

Jackson also practices social and community psychology. His service on the board of the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center earned the President's Award from that group. He is a member of and volunteer for the Mental Health Association of North Carolina; for doing "everything from collecting presents for patients to lending professional skills," he received the Irene McCain McFarland Award in 1989. He is the only non-clinician member of the board of the North Carolina Psychological Foundation, a group that fosters pro-bono work by its members and helps to secure mental health services for people who cannot afford to pay for them.

In part because of the general perception that mental illness is "just in someone's head," mental health care has been given a low priority in the general debate over health care issues. "We have to rethink our priorities," Jackson says. "Depression, for example, causes people to use physical care services more. We have to make choices for our health care system that are the most cost-effective but also the most helpful to people."

For Jackson, it is all a matter of educating the vision, so that we notice what is around us and find a joy not only in discovery but in solving the problems we see. "Education," he says, "is more than acquiring knowledge; it is learning to enjoy life."

EVERY THREE YEARS OR SO since 1955, H. William Hoffman '49, College Fellow in the Humanities, has produced a book-length work of fiction: that rate has yielded 10 novels, three short-story collections, a play, and scores of short-fiction works appearing in anthologies of Southern and American literature and such periodicals as Atlantic Monthly, the Sewanee Review, and the Virginia Quarterly Review. In 1993, he was awarded the John Dos Passos Prize for Literature by Longwood College; in 1995, the Hillsdale Prize for Fiction from the Fellowship of Southern Writers; this year, one of his stories came in third in the national O. Henry short fiction competition.

Hoffman is a trim, polite, soft-spoken man. His face is weathered from walks on his Charlotte County farm, where, he says, he and his wife "live in an old house with two old dogs and two old cats and one old horse." Surprised at his success as an author, he remembers the "slump" in the early '70s—a caesura so long it made him believe he would never again see his words in print. When his agent told him, finally, that one of his books had sold, he could not remember what book she was talking about.

He recalls, too, wondering more than once if his daughters thought he "should be doing something worthwhile." He could have been a country lawyer. Or a banker. Or a corporate executive. He could have spent his time in a court room or at a polished desk.

But his journey through this life was not to be so direct. After Hampden-Sydney in 1949 he tried law school at Washington & Lee. No, he said to himself almost on the first day; this is not the way. He was made a special graduate student at W&L and studied third-year German, third-year French, philosophy, music. And writing. Writing, yes, he thought. He had published his first story in the Garnet, Hampden-Sydney's literary magazine, in 1948. (He had also published his first poem in the Garnet, and had been hurt when no one appreciated his talents: "No one recognized its great value," he says facetiously. "It was a highly original poem—it had no verbs in it." He laughs at this recall of his clumsy beginnings.) Perhaps he could be a writer.

He says he went on to the University of Iowa because "I had a need to talk to writers. Trouble was, there were too darn many writers out there." So he went to work as a dictationist—the person who takes jumbled telephone reports from journalists and turns them into decent copy—for The Evening Star in Washington, D.C. At the Star, he had no time to write his own stories.

He decided to go to Mecca. The only time he had been in New York was shipping through it, crossing the Hudson on a ferry, and boarding the Queen Mary on the way to England in World War II. He first bought a map and memorized it, then got a place to live at 103rd and Broadway. He circled two ads in the New York Times, and went looking for a job.

On a cold, wet day, after waiting in a metal chair in a mausoleum of a room, he was interviewed by a personnel officer at the New York Public Library. "She was really irritable. I guess we all were," he recalls. "She couldn't understand why we didn't have majors or minors at Hampden-Sydney, didn't know what kind of college I had come from. But when she learned I had had three years of Greek, she was a lot more friendly." He had the job if he wanted it, she told him. The interviewer at the Chase Manhattan Bank was impressed with Hoffman's description of his alma mater. "You know," the clerk told him, "I wish I had gone to a college like that."

He took the job at Chase because the hours—6 pm to 1 am—would allow him to write and eat. "They hired a wide variety of people for that shift," he says. "At ten o'clock coffee break, we all got together: clothes designers, grad students, writers, dancers dancing in the marble halls of the Bank. The grad students from Columbia and I would talk about writing. There was a young guy from Indiana who was trying to get a job as a singer. It was Jim Nabors, and he did."

While Hoffman is trying to bring back some idea of the past, he closes his eyes, intent on the images flashing deep in the cerebrum. Once the words come, he looks directly at the listener, then delivers the punch line—or the moral—with a wry smile. He talks almost in the voices of those he sees behind his lids. "I had been in New York for a year," he begins, lids lowered. "Got a call from Dean Wilson at Hampden-Sydney. Now, Dean Wilson was loud, and always started his conversations with 'Boy!' [Hoffman booms out the word as Wilson would have, opens his eyes wide.] First thing I heard was 'Boy! We want you to come on back down here and teach.' Well," Hoffman concludes, "it would never have occurred to me to stay in New York after that. If Dean Wilson said 'Come,' I came."

A native of West Virginia, Hoffman had thought the Southside region "a very unlovely part of Virginia." At first he liked the area only because of "the kindness the Thompsons, McCraes, and Crawleys showed me after the War.” Graves Thompson’s father had baptized Hoffman at the age of three; once at Hampden-Sydney, he was “family” to the Thompsons. And “Ned Crawley introduced me to literature. He was a hard but fair professor, and later a friend and constant help to me.” The beauty of the land, however, eluded him until his senior year. “A boy from Farmville and I went out for a drive,” he says of a spring day in 1949. “There had been a shower, and the sun came out over a field just as we were going by Worsham school. Suddenly, I was saying, ‘This is beautiful.’ I had a transformation, just like that.”

He has lived in Southside Virginia since he moved down from New York in 1952. He taught at Hampden-Sydney for seven years, took seven years off (publishing three more novels), and taught for another seven years as writer-in-residence. In 1973, he decided to leave teaching completely. Ironically, that was about the time the slump hit and “all the doors seemed to be closing,” just when he had decided to walk through them. An alumnus of the College did offer him a “big opportunity” to be a corporate executive, a job that would put him on “easy street.” But he knew it would take all of him and leave no part of his soul for the words, the music, the stories. He was lost.

Then came epiphany. He went to the funeral of one of his uncles; of all the eulogy, his mind caught the words, “the sacred trust of life.” Those words “leapt at me,” he recalls. “I realized that if you have been given something this important, you must use it and do it no matter what it costs.” They brought about a remembrance of words he had read in 1960, in a book about a man who had performed heroic deeds in World War II. “Someone had asked that man how he could go through all that, how he could do all that, and that man had replied, ‘I could always take one more step.’ (That man, by the way, was General Samuel V. Wilson, whom I did not meet until 1995.) I had carried his words for all those years; after the funeral, those two phrases just came together. They got me through.” His work started selling again, “things started turning around,” he began to attract critical attention.

Now that he has reached his destination, he could stop. But he still takes a long walk every day, always the longest of his experience, through his house to his study—only 30 to 40 steps—where he leaves the realm of the here-and-now and enters the world of fiction. “And every morning, I am still afraid of facing the blank page,” he admits. “Nobody can help you in there, no matter how much they love you. But as soon as I sit down there, a sort of calm comes over me. I’m in my world and I’m all right.”

He is at work now on a final draft of another novel, written according to the same principles that guided all the others: throughout his career, he has “tried not to cheat,” to stay faithful to his material, and to bring to his work a significance beyond entertainment and amusement. Although he is classed by some critics as a Southern writer, he never considered himself geographically. “It doesn’t make any difference what locale it is; you have to find the universal in the particular—to talk about triumph and failure, joy and sorrow, love and hate, cowardice and heroism.” He affirms—ironically, as Faulkner did before him—that he is “just a simple storyteller.”

Commencement 1996

POPULAR AUTHOR TOM CLANCY, a former insurance agent who has been turning out bestsellers like Patriot Games, Clear and Present Danger, and other techno-military-intelligence thrillers since he published The Hunt for Red October in 1984, spoke to the graduating class at Commencement ceremonies on Sunday, May 12. His writing career began, he told them, when he realized, in his thirties, that he still had not decided what he wanted to be when he grew up.

"The stunning and depressing realization hit me that I was grown up, finally, and while I might not be what I wanted to be, I was in the middle-class trap that I myself had forged," he recalled, "just as surely as Scrooge's partner, Jacob Marley, had forged his own chains of destiny."

The trap is not in marrying, having children, practicing a profession, or acquiring property. Neither is it in the people who come to "depend on you to be there and perform your obligations without fail." The trap is, rather, the fear associated with the obligations. "If you fail in these responsibilities," he warned, "you have failed in the most crucial test of your life. That knowledge is what the trap is made of."

After a "few more years of dabbling," he discovered the defense against the trap: "Each of you has a dream, . . . something you want to accomplish for yourself. Your life may change, but your dream doesn't have to. Responsibilities need not erase it. Duties need not obscure it. Your spouse and children need not get in its way, because the dream is within you."

Hold on to that dream, he told them, and "you may grow old but you will never be old. And that, ladies and gentlemen, is the ultimate success."

"Gardens" premieres

On April 25, Hampden-Sydney College saw the world premiere of The Gardens of November, a play by Joe Robinette and Hampden-Sydney's poet-in-residence Tom O'Grady. In part, the drama is about the life of Czechoslovakian poet Jaroslav Seifert, who won the Nobel Prize in 1984, and was the first Czech to do so; it is also the story of the two Hampden-Sydney professors, O'Grady and professor of modern languages Paul Jagasich (called John White and Alex Sorescu in the play), who translate the poet's work, later meet him, and try to smuggle some more of his work out of the Communist-controlled country.

But more, the play is about an old poet's influence on a young one: how poetry can transcend political oppression, international boundaries, and the human life span, to survive in the hearts of those who need its words and music. "While reminding people of the events of 1968 in Czechoslovakia," says O'Grady, "We had the idea of bringing poetry to a wide audience. The play is, finally, about poetry."

Such an ambitious undertaking—bringing together subject matter, theme, and other elements of stagecraft—could have become a technical nightmare. Robinette, a professor of drama and a playwright who has also produced a number of plays, wanted to create a work that would balance the poetry with the cast, blocking, set, narrative, and dialogue. "The delicate work," he says, "was interspersing the poetic element with the narrative to give the play an ethereal quality. That was the effect we wanted to achieve." Carried through the work in individual voices or in choral chant, Seifert's word-images explain and enrich the tale.

The idea for Gardens was born twelve years ago. When Robinette heard the news about Seifert, O'Grady, and Jagasich, he called O'Grady to say that he wanted to write a play about the Seifert adventure. "I was interested—am interested—in poetry," says the playwright. "I had studied under two great poets. I had been to Czechoslovakia a couple of years before that. I was also intrigued as a dramatist about how the story could be brought to the stage."

When the two finally got together last year, collaboration on their "experiment" became a matter of week-long stays in New Jersey or at Rose Bower, O'Grady's vineyard near Hampden-Sydney, and thousands of dollars' worth of telephone calls. Crafting sometimes got in the way of art: "You are forced to think about little things," Robinette says. "Things like, 'does this actor have time to make this costume change?' and other technical details." And even while the play was being produced here at Hampden-Sydney and in Farmville at the Waterworks Playhouse, its creators were making changes. There were re-writes along the way. "It's the old idea," Robinette laughs, "that plays are never written. They are re-written."

The play was directed by Dudley Sauvé, veteran actor and director of Farmville's Waterworks Players. Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students, and local performers played beside Hollywood actor Peter Michael Goetz, whose credits include Brighton Beach

Public Service Program launched

Hampden-Sydney officially launched its public service program on February 8 and bestowed upon three distinguished alumni, former United States Senators William B. Spong '41 and Paul S. Tribble, Jr. '68, and Eugene V. Hickok, Jr. '72, the Hampden-Sydney College Public Service Award.

All three men are well known for their service to nation, state, and community. Senator Spong, a partner in the law firm Cooper, Spong & Davis of Portsmouth, was a member of the Virginia House of Delegates from 1954 to 1956, the Virginia State Senate from 1956 to 1966, and the United States Senate from 1966 to 1973. Since his appointment as a lecturer in law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law of the College of William and Mary in 1948, he has been a visiting scholar at universities in Virginia, England, and Australia. From 1976 to 1985, he served as the Dudley Warner Woodbridge Professor and Dean of Marshall-Wythe. A member of the Hampden-Sydney Board of Trustees from 1956 to 1975, he was President of Old Dominion University from 1989 to 1990.

Senator Tribble, the first financial contributor to Hampden-Sydney's Public Service Program, began his legislative career in 1976, with his election to the U.S. House of Representatives. While a member of the House, he served on the Budget, Armed Services, and Merchant Marine and Fisheries committees. He also served on special task forces on tax policy, entitlement spending, veterans affairs, and national defense. In 1983, he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served on the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation; the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs; the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and the Committee on Governmental Affairs. He was a member of the United States Delegation to the United Nations in 1988. Since 1989, he has practiced as an attorney with the firm of Shuttleworth Ruloff Giordano & Kahle, P.C., in Newport News and served as president of The Jefferson Group, a consulting and lobbying firm in Washington, D.C. In January 1996, he became president of Christopher Newport University in Newport News.

BEVERLY ANNE REIN

Dr. Hickok, on leave from his position as professor of political science at Dickinson College, was appointed Secretary of Education for the State of Pennsylvania in early 1995. A commentator on and contributor to ABC News Nightline, C-SPAN, and Public Television's McNeil-Lehrer News Hour, he has published books, articles, reviews, and newspaper columns and lectured extensively in this country and in Europe on constitutional law and the American legal system.

Before earning his Master's and Ph.D. at the University of Virginia, he was Director of Financial Aid (1973-1974) and Associate Director of Development (1974-1976) at Hampden-Sydney College.

Before the evening's celebration,

Dr. Willard F. Harper, an Escort Officer for the Department of State and former United Nations Chief of Mission and Resident Coordinator in Africa, spoke about "African Developments: Old Views, New Views." A graduate of Morehouse College, with a Master's from Western Reserve and a Ph.D. with highest honors from the Sorbonne (University of Paris), Dr. Harper served in many other UN posts during his long career in international civil service, including Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Acting Head of The Central Africa and Indian Ocean Region Regional Bureau for the UNDP, and Chief Technical Advisor-Project Manager for UNESCO.

The Public Service Program was awarded, in March, a three-year grant from the National Center for the Study of the Constitution to support continuing education sessions for the College's alumni. The Olin Foundation, Philip Morris, Incorporated, and the Fulbright Scholars Program have given support as well: because of their grants, Ambassador William Jones will teach classes in American foreign policy and African-American culture and deliver a public address in the coming fall semester; and Dr. Jean Marie Crouzatier, a leading French scholar who served with the United Nations in Southeast Asia and took part in drafting the current Cambodian constitution, will be Hampden-Sydney's first Fulbright Scholar, in spring 1997.

Lectures and Programs

- Charles W. Sydnor, Jr., Hampden-Sydney's James C. Wheat, Jr., Visiting Professor, taught a semester-long seminar on leadership, and in April, delivered a public lecture, "Political Leadership in a Culture of Chaos." A graduate of Emory & Henry College, (where he served as president from 1984 to 1991), he has taught at Ohio State University, Vanderbilt University, Longwood College, and Hampden-Sydney College, and has served as the Executive Assistant to the Governor of Virginia. He is president and CEO of Central Virginia Educational Telecommunications Corporation.

FEBRUARY

- In honor of the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., the Minority Affairs Committee and The Brothers gave us a chance to compare the philosophical differences between King's and Malcolm X's ideas of freedom and dignity for African Americans, sponsoring a program that featured clips from the PBS program Eyes on the Prize and excerpts from speeches by the two civil rights leaders.

- Dr. Albert A. Bartlett, professor emeritus of physics at the University of Colorado-Boulder, using simple arithmetic, showed the enormous effects of a small but steady rate of growth of human population in a "finite environment" like the Earth. Dr. Bartlett has also taught at Harvard and was on the scientific staff of the Nobel Institute of Physics for a year. His lecture was co-sponsored by the Department of Physics and Astronomy and the American Institute of Physics.

MARCH

- The Department of Mathematics, the Math Club, and the Entrepreneurship Society sponsored a panel discussion, "The Return of the MBA's." Alumni John C. Dickinson '83, a Math and Physics double major with a Darden MBA, Hiter Harris '83, an Economics and Math double major with a Harvard MBA, and A. Pendleton Dupuis '85, an Economics and Math double major with a Wharton MBA, talked about their experiences after Hampden-Sydney both in business school and in the business world. Harris was a founder of Harris & Williams investment banking firm, and Dickinson works there. Dupuis was a founder, with alumnus and Wharton classmate Brad Cary '85, of CIBT, a successful passport-expediting business.

- In recognition of Women's History Month, the Gender Issues Committee brought to campus Professor

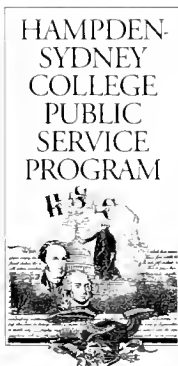

William B. Spong '41

Paul S. Tribble '68

Eugene V. Hickok '72

Over spring break, five of Hampden-Sydney's trees were cut down, among them a 200-year-old red oak by College Road (top) and a spectacular white beech in front of Estcourt (above).

Mike Van Yahres, an arborist from Charlottesville, said that the trees, which have steadily declined since he first examined them in 1989, had to be removed because they were a "danger to people and property."

Patricia Meyer Spacks, chair of the English Department of the University of Virginia. In her lecture, "Logics of Self-Love: Frankenstein and Jane Austen," Dr. Spacks compared Shelley's and Austen's treatments of people driven by self-interest and unclear about "the relation of self to other."

- Dr. W. Randolph Johnson, addressed the issue of corporate responsibility to the public, in his lecture, "The Corporation, Its Products, and You."

For 30 years he was a chemist at Philip Morris; as DuPont Visiting Scholar, he is an adjunct professor of chemistry at Hampden-Sydney.

APRIL

- Virginia Alcohol Beverage Control Board Special Agent Michelle McMullen presented a program about the ABC Board's duties, responsibilities, and enforcement policies. The visit was sponsored by the Moore Student Health Center.

- Professor Eric J. Chaisson, Hampden-Sydney's Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar, talked about how all that we know began, in his lecture, "Cosmic Evolution: The Origin of Matter and Life." Dr. Chaisson is a research professor of physics and astronomy, research professor of education, and Director of the Wright Center for Innovative Science Education of Tufts University.

- Todd E. Jones, Assistant Professor of Philosophy at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, talked about "Indiana Jones and the Perils of Belief Ascription." Professor Jones has spoken and written widely about popular American culture, belief systems, and the philosophy of science; his lecture was sponsored by the Department of Philosophy.

- Paul Heyne, Ph.D., lectured about the continuing tension between economics and religion. Heyne, a senior lecturer at the University of Washington, wrote The Economic Way of Thinking, the textbook used here in introductory economics courses.

- The Department of Mathematics and Computer Science and the Hampden-Sydney Chapter of Pi Mu Epsilon sponsored a lecture, "The Mathematics of Baseball," by Professor Roland Minton of Roanoke College. Professor Minton has lectured widely throughout our region on relations between mathematics and sports.

Seeing stars

The Hampden-Sydney College Observatory celebrated its Grand Opening with a Community Observing Night on Monday, May 6. The evening was the culmination of a number of observation nights at the new facility, which became a popular place this spring to witness rare events like the total eclipse of the moon and the appearance of Comet Hyakutake. Although the comet hid behind the sun on May 6, community stargazers got an eyeful (or lensful) of galaxies, nebulae, and other celestial objects.

Music, music

The Department of Fine Arts warmed up a dismal February by bringing Beethoven, Mozart, and other maestros—well, their music—to campus. Cellist Samuel Swift and pianist Naoko Takao performed two all-Beethoven concerts, offering such pieces as variations from The Magic Flute and all five sonatas. Swift, formerly a lecturer at the University of Virginia, has appeared as soloist throughout the United States and Canada. In 1994, he participated in the Musicians' Coaching Program of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival. Pianist Naoko Takao has performed frequently as soloist and chamber musician in Japan, Germany, and across the United States.

Later in the month, pianist Fabio Parrini performed Mozart, Chopin, and Debussy. A graduate of the Conservatory of Padova and Boston University, he has won, among other prizes, the Premio Città di Treviso, the premier national competition in Italy. He also has been a Young Artist at our Music Festival.

In April, after winter had departed, the music continued. The Artaria Quartet of Boston played selections of music by Haydn, Bohuslav Martina, and Beethoven. Ray Shows and Nancy Oliveros, violinists, Ken Martinson, violist, and Laura Thielke, cellist, are old friends to campus music-lovers, having played as an ensemble in the Coaching Program of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival several years ago.

Paul Bempéchat, too, returned to Hampden-Sydney in April, and lectured about Jean Cras, a turn-of-the-century French composer, inventor, self-taught musician, and career naval officer, whose opera Polyphemus (1922) won the Prize of the City of Paris.

Clarinetist Adrian Chtchour and pianist Sandor Szabo offered the final concert of the semester, performing Romantic and twentieth-century works.

Student news

In training for good citizenship, Hampden-Sydney students engage in service projects throughout the academic year:

- Seventeen students were tutors at the Prince Edward County Elementary School this year. Members of the GMGC Tutorial Program, they met weekly with the students for an hour or more.
- Ten students, recruited by The Brothers of Hampden-Sydney, gave their time as Big Brothers at the Prince Edward County Elementary School.
- The men of the Kappa Alpha fraternity worked on the Breckinridge home (destroyed by fire last fall), and adopted a section of Route 133 just off campus.
- The Philosophy Club, Circle K, and Betas helped with campus recycling efforts.
- And, if you think fraternities are just about parties, think again. In second semester, our fraternities helped the Development Office raise funds, collecting $26,630.
- The work of student scholars has also greatly benefited the Museum this year. Rick Tillar (Dr. Anne Lund, supervisor) did research on environmental monitoring (mold spore evaluation); Ralph Chesson and Bradley Davidson (Professor Pamela Fox, supervisor) created "The Reviewing Lens," a photographic redocumentation exhibit; and Bradley Davidson (Professor Pamela Fox, supervisor): worked on digital imaging of the Museum's artifacts for the purpose of cataloguing.
- In April, more than 20 Hampden-Sydney students showed up on a cold, rainy Saturday to help some special athletes in the area's Special Olympics field day.

THE RECORD OF HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE

Summer 1996

On Friday, February 16, a fire was discovered in a residence room of Hart House (below). No one was injured. Because of the quick response and efforts of the Hampden-Sydney Volunteer Fire Department, assisted by other area departments, damage was limited to three rooms on the second floor of the wood-frame structure. All fire prevention systems worked well: the smoke and heat detectors were activated properly. Investigators have determined that the fire was caused by faulty Christmas lights left burning in an unoccupied room. Damage to the house is approximately $30,000, and the loss to personal belongings is estimated to be $10,000. The students who had been living in the Hart House have moved to the Burrell House. Hart House will be repaired and put up for sale to faculty or staff.

Willette L. LeHew '57 was presented Hampden-Sydney College's Keating Medallion at a citation ceremony in Richmond on April 20. LeHew joins an elite group who share a common interest in the success of the College. Established by James J. Keating '56, the Keating Medallion is awarded each year to an alumnus, parent, or friend of the College to recognize outstanding service and extraordinary dedication to Hampden-Sydney. Earlier in April, Dr. LeHew was appointed rector of the Medical College of Hampton Roads Board of Visitors, the governing board of Eastern Virginia Medical School.

Alcohol risk-reduction program in place for this fall's freshmen

When freshmen hit the campus this August, they will be introduced to college life in general and to Hampden-Sydney in particular. They will also be learning about the risks they take when they drink alcohol.

For the first time this year, our College is among a handful or so in the country to require that all entering freshman undergo a six-hour alcohol risk-reduction course—On Campus... Talking About Alcohol (OCTAA), a research-based program developed by Prevention Research Institute of Lexington, Kentucky.

The students' instructors are members of the College's faculty, staff, administration, and Board of Trustees, who trained with other volunteers from local colleges and from Piedmont area service agencies for four days in May. Linda Martin, RN, director of the Moore Student Health Center and coordinator of the on-site training, thinks the diversity of the group of instructors indicates its strength. Unlike other colleges, she said, where only student affairs professionals run the program, Hampden-Sydney drew volunteers from all parts of the College, including the Chairman of its Board. "The serious, College-wide effort to tackle the issue of alcohol use," Ms. Martin said, "makes

While endorsing abstinence, OCTAA acknowledges that many college students drink to excess; instead of all-or-nothing directives, it offers information and a method for objective self-assessment. "If students have enough factual, research-based information to make sound decisions," said Glen Bowman, College Counselor and a certified OCTAA instructor, "they are more likely to make good decisions."

OCTAA training was as much a learning process for the instructors as it will be for students. Extensive research refutes many commonly held beliefs about alcoholism: although, for example, some people are at a greater biological risk than others, anyone can develop alcoholism, depending on how much he consumes and how often he drinks to impairment. Certain social and psychological factors—like belonging to a group that supports high-risk drinking—can increase the chances that a person will develop alcoholism or alcohol-related health problems. "The program put numbers on paper that people can really relate to," said Annual Fund Director and former H-SC football player Tim Butler '62. "After seeing those numbers, it would be very difficult to say, as so many people do, 'It can't happen to me.' It can and does happen."

Said Board Chairman William C. Boinest '54 of the research-based approach to prevention: "It's an adult, responsible way to make anyone aware that alcohol not used sensibly can be very destructive. And the program treats people as adults. It says, 'You can make high-risk choices or low-risk ones. It's up to you.'"

George Bagby, English professor and father of a high school senior, practiced teaching the course to his son and son's three friends in June. "I saw it as a sort of graduation present for them," he said. "I wanted to make sure they went off to college with those facts."

"We are not going to eliminate high-risk drinking," Butler acknowledged, "but if we can get students to understand what it can do to them, we'll have done a lot." Campus security director Keith Temple agrees: "If we can get one or two people to use alcohol in a low-risk way, there's no telling what we've prevented from happening."

President Wilson receives national award for service to America

When President Wilson took the podium on May 30 to accept the William Oliver Baker Award, the national intelligence community's highest honor, he unabashedly put in a plug for Hampden-Sydney College.

"Each summer we graduate a shade under 200 young men, some of whom—in about the same number as my World War II Marauder I & R platoon—go into public service, mainly into government at the national level," he told the 700 guests gathered at Bolling Air Force Base. He explained, too, that the College derived its name from two English martyrs for freedom because "we had no established American heroes when Hampden-Sydney was founded."

Wilson, the leader of these young men at Hampden-Sydney, gave less attention to that evening's recognition of him as a national hero. Presented by the Security Affairs Support Association, the Baker Award commends excellence in intelligence and national security activities of the United States Government. Nominations are made by members of the intelligence community, the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, and the scientific, industrial, and academic communities; the recipient is chosen by representatives of the Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, and Director of Central Intelligence. Among the Baker Award's previous recipients are Senator Barry Goldwater, Ambassador Richard Helms, Dr. Edwin Land (inventor of the Polaroid camera), and Dr. James R. Schlesinger, former Secretary of Defense, former Secretary of Energy, former Director of Central Intelligence, and father of James R. Schlesinger, Jr. '93.

On May 30, Wilson joined that elite group. The list of his services to the United States could go on for pages, and his biography writ small outdoes those of many a head of state. But an outline is enough to remind us that Wilson could have invented the definition of public service, an area of study he has long championed here. He held every enlisted and commissioned rank, from infantry private to lieutenant general, in the U.S. Army during a 37-year military career. His tour of duty with "Merrill's Marauders" in the North Burma Campaign in World War II has become legend—and a movie. After graduate school at Columbia University Russian Institute following the War, he was assigned part-time to the State Department Diplomatic Pouch and Courier Service (to give him access to interesting places), was an official interpreter in Berlin, Potsdam, and Vienna, and was a liaison with Soviet Armed Forces in East Germany and Eastern Austria. Since that time, he has served as an intelligence staff officer at the Washington level; a Central Intelligence Agency field case officer; a Special Forces Group Commander; Deputy Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Special Operations; Assistant Division Commander (Operations) of the 82nd Airborne Division; U.S. Defense Attaché in Moscow, Deputy to the Director of Central Intelligence; and Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency. He was Director for Field Operations and later U.S. Mission Coordinator in Viet Nam for the U.S. Agency for International Development, later receiving a Presidential Appointment to the personal rank of Minister to the U.S. Embassy in Saigon. Since retiring in 1977, he has been Chairman of the Military Board of Virginia, Chairman of the Secretary of Defense's Special Operations Policy Advisory Group, and staff consultant to the House and Senate Armed Services Committees. In 1992, he was named the Virginia Cultural Laureate for Public Service.

At Hampden-Sydney we are familiar with this formidable catalogue of our president's involvement in state and national affairs. Wilson has worn such phrases as "selfless service," "courageous leader of gifted vision and integrity," and "steadfast dedication"—words from the Baker Award citation—like a work shirt to the President's Office since 1992, as an example to students of the proper uniform for a gentleman-scholar.

The irony is that many of Samuel Vaughan Wilson's services to state and country can never be known or talked about. In the intelligence community, public acknowledgement of patriotic acts is a tricky thing (as he jokes often, he could give you many of the details of his life and actions, but he'd have to kill you). It's hard to recognize a person's contributions to the maintenance of an enterprise whose success rests on secrecy, and difficult to acknowledge achievements in national security, where "confidential" is the order of the day.

Because of the need for continuing secrecy, even Wilson's high-ranked well-wishers could only hint at some of his services. What, for instance, was General Wilson doing "during the entire span of the Cold War," that earned the gratitude of former Secretary of State Alexander Haig? How was Wilson involved in the creation of the Joint Operations Special Command, mentioned by Major General Peter J. Schoomaker (USA), Commanding General at Fort Bragg? Why is former Ambassador Richard Helms ever grateful for Wilson's help with a "defector resettlement problem"? And why did George Bush, former President of the United States, append a personal note to his official letter: "Dear Sam—I will always be grateful to you"?

We may never know. Clearly, though, behind the President Wilson who uses abstractions like freedom, democracy, and public service with his political science students or tells graduating seniors to "go, slay dragons of evil, or else come back on your shields" stands Private-Lieutenant-Colonel-General-Agent Samuel V. Wilson, who has done it all for his country. He knows what he is talking—or not talking—about.

Prudent People Plan Ahead

By J. Scott Colley, Provost and Dean of the Faculty

IN THE SUMMER 1995 RECORD, I wrote about the College's strategic planning exercises that charted our path from the late 1980s into the mid-1990s. Readers may recall that the 1989 strategic plan was a huge success, with 95% of the projects carried out to their successful conclusions. Moreover, I also noted that the College had undertaken a new strategic planning exercise to guide us from the mid-1990s until the new century and beyond. Prudent people plan ahead, and both the previous and present planning efforts have been linked to our conviction that we owe it to the College and its constituencies to proceed carefully into the shrouded mists of the future. One never knows exactly what lies ahead, but careful planners are always better able to respond to surprises than those who do not engage in planning.

We also had another motivation to plan carefully for the twenty-first century. Every ten years we face reaccreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, usually referred to as "SACS," and 1996 was the year to undergo that review. In part because of our earlier success in planning, SACS invited us to become a test site for a new approach to reaccreditation, one called "the strategic model." Therefore, we were able to link strategic planning to the reaccreditation exercise, kill two birds with one stone, and possibly, by example, help other colleges in our region do better jobs than before during their reaccreditation processes.

We therefore engaged in a year of self-study to prepare for the SACS reaccreditation visit with teams of faculty, staff members, and students, under the able leadership of Professor Wayne Tucker, looking at four areas of concern: the academic program; admissions policies; assessment and evaluation; and community. After a year of hard work, the committees and subcommittees of the self-study produced a 44-page single-spaced document with 46 recommendations for future action. We also produced an equally long and complex report that proved that we were indeed "in compliance" with the many SACS rules and regulations for reaccreditation. The SACS visiting team of twelve academic leaders from colleges and universities from across the South spent the first week of March 1996 on the Hampden-Sydney campus reading our reports, checking our documentation, and interviewing members of our planning committees while carrying out their investigation of how well we were doing. At this writing, the SACS report is only in draft form, and thus cannot be cited in this article. Let me merely say that the week of the SACS visit was a pleasant and valuable one, and that our visitors left with very good impressions of Hampden-Sydney College. I am not certain how the reaccreditation exercise could have gone any better.

In the meantime, strategic planning for the twenty-first century has proceeded apace. The College faculty devoted its August 1995 workshop to strategic planning, and in September elected six representatives to serve with the Administrative Cabinet and three Trustees on the Strategic Planning Committee. The SPC, as the group is called, had as its tasks (1) to consider the observations and recommendations of the year-long self-study, and (2) to decide what additional steps the College should follow during the rest of the decade.

Strategic planning means moving from recommendations into plans for action, building upon strengths and minimizing weaknesses, all with the goal of living up to our mission as an institution. The new strategic planning exercise was organized into three phases. The first was a consideration of the past and of how history has shaped us; the second was a sustained inquiry into present circumstances and into how our mission has come to life in our educational program; the third was conceived of as a look into the future—our vision of the Hampden-Sydney of 2000, 2005, and beyond. Assisting our work greatly was John Brinkley's history of the College, which allowed members of the Hampden-Sydney community to understand the forces that had shaped the College as we know it today.

Scott Colley

THE SPC SPENT A NUMBER OF weeks during the fall 1995 semester considering our mission, and how we now define our educational goals. The Committee reaffirmed our traditional liberal arts curriculum; the special relationships that exist among students, faculty, and staff members; our sense of community; and our long-time commitment to our students' personal and intellectual growth during the crucial transition from youth to early adulthood. It is easy enough to summarize these four points in a single sentence; indeed, one might say that such conclusions were inevitable. Perhaps they were. Yet the SPC decided to work from first principles, and to identify our bedrock principles. Our goal was to define who and what we are today, and who and what we insist we must be 25 years from now. After we defined the bedrock principles—our reason for being—we then outlined a number of projects to which we wished to devote further study and effort.

First on the list is a thorough review of the curriculum. The present curriculum has been in place since 1981, although courses here and there have been dropped or added as time has gone by. It is time that we look closely at the curriculum to make certain it addresses our institutional values, and that it functions as well as it should. The review of the curriculum is thus a type of audit, and our aim will be to introduce changes and improvements if our review calls for them. Other items designated for further study are the future role of educational technology; the changing nature of student life on campus; College governance; and the faculty evaluation and reward system. Sometime in the near future, once funding is secured, the SPC must commission a campus master plan. Not only are such plans mandated by SACS, they are prudent exercises for colleges that plan ahead.

THE MAJOR PLANNING TASK assigned to the SPC during the spring of 1996 is one that received a good deal of off-campus attention. In early January 1996, the Chairman of the Hampden-Sydney Board of Trustees, William C. Boinest '54, asked the SPC to assemble data and arguments that address whether we should maintain our all-male student body, or consider admitting women students. The Board asked that a report be submitted at its May 1996 meeting. (The SPC was also asked to study proposals for a much smaller College with a student body in the 800-850 range. After considering budget projections and probable impacts upon educational programs, the Board rejected the "small college model" as an option.)

The planning agenda received extensive newspaper and television coverage, and yet, the resulting attention to what had been, from day one, a public discussion turned out to have been worthwhile. We were able to brief our off-campus constituency about the planning effort, and to put into wider public discussion the range of issues we had been confronting on campus. Indeed, Chairman Boinest and President Wilson twice wrote all alumni, parents, and friends of the College, outlining the planning process and supplying copies of newspaper articles about campus discussions. We were encouraged by the number of responses that were supportive of the careful, thoughtful, and public planning process.

STILL FACING THE COLLEGE is the important question which inspired Chairman Boines's request: can we continue to enroll adequate numbers of the students who can most benefit from a Hampden-Sydney education? The number of applications for admission have ranged from 534 in 1980 to 1004 in 1989, which turns out to have been a record year. It was during that period that the College grew by about 200 students. Other small liberal arts colleges experienced similar enrollment patterns and encouraging growth, when growth was desired, during the same decade. Several years ago, with a doubling of annual merit scholarship awards from 25 to 50, we raised the size of the entering class to 290, with the hope of soon admitting 300 freshmen each fall. Given a steady attrition rate of about 33%, it would take a large entering class to help us maintain a student body of the size we desire. Unfortunately, since our record year, the number of applications has dropped from the high of 1004 to annual totals in the 800s, with an occasional dip, such as this year's total in the mid-700s. Although admissions numbers have been going up and down for the past 30 years, and have tended to mirror such variations nationally, we have been watching recent totals carefully.

The decade has also brought dramatic increases in demands for financial aid, both at Hampden-Sydney and most other private colleges. Although the percentage of the Hampden-Sydney budget devoted to financial aid is below that of a number of our peer institutions, nevertheless we have found we have been spending increasing amounts to recruit from a smaller pool of students: 47% more in financial aid (excluding loans) in 1995-96 than we spent in 1990-91. Some of the increases in financial aid have been occasioned by the recent doubling in the number of merit scholarships awarded. If one counts student loans, financial aid has doubled between 1990-91 until now, from about $4 million annually six years ago to $8 million this year. Despite the dramatic increases in all types of financial assistance available to our students, the visiting SACS team noted that the College would have to consider even further increases if we intend to maintain academic quality. Again, the Hampden-Sydney experience mirrors national trends. As we look toward the future, we should determine the steps we must follow in order to maintain the academic quality of entering classes. With acceptance rates that have recently climbed above 80%, our reputation as a selective college is a growing concern to us.

As President Wilson has said, "Our greatest challenge is living up to our potential." The colleges and universities with which we compete for students present a moving target: they are constantly strengthening their programs and energetically recruiting the students most desirable to them. We have to make bold choices if we wish to remain competitive with other excellent private colleges and public universities that want to win our best applicants away from us. Other good small liberal arts colleges find themselves facing similar challenges.

NUMBER OF APPLICANTS: 4-YEAR AVERAGE AT
HAMPDEN-SYDNEY AND PEER COLLEGES

"The long-term historical trend is . . . reflected in the 4-year rolling average of [applications to Hampden-Sydney], represented by the solid line. This shows a significant increase in applications during the past decade, followed by a return to applications in the neighborhood of 800. . . . [W]e experience significant variations in the number of applications from year to year, . . . a fact of life in our business. . . . These variations are likely to persist in all four models. . . ."

FOLLOWING THE MAY 1996 Trustee meeting, the Board asked that President Wilson and his Cabinet carry the studies of the all-male and coeducational models several steps further, and produce budgets and long-range plans for both. This second stage of planning formed the basis of a three-day Trustee retreat at Hampden-Sydney in early August. Thirty Trustees attended the retreat, and reviewed the facts, figures, and arguments pertaining to the choices open to the College. Then, on August 20th, the Board met in special session in Richmond, and voted to affirm the all-male policy which has long guided the College. With that vote came the commitment to provide the resources and support for programs that will ensure the future health of the College.

NONE OF THE CHOICES FACING the College back in January 1996 was an easy one. The next five years will be a time of testing. It is our great good fortune that the College is such a good one, that its educational programs are excellent, that we have such good faculty and staff members, and that our student body is made up of so many fine young men of whom we are justifiably proud. We can plan for the future from a position of strength.

The Strategic Planning Committee will sponsor a curriculum review during the 1996-97 academic year; it will consider the changing role of technology in our educational program; and it will carry out the other studies that will help us prepare for the years ahead. Our goal will be to improve upon the great success of the 1989 strategic plan, and to prepare the College to carry out its mission well into the twenty-first century.

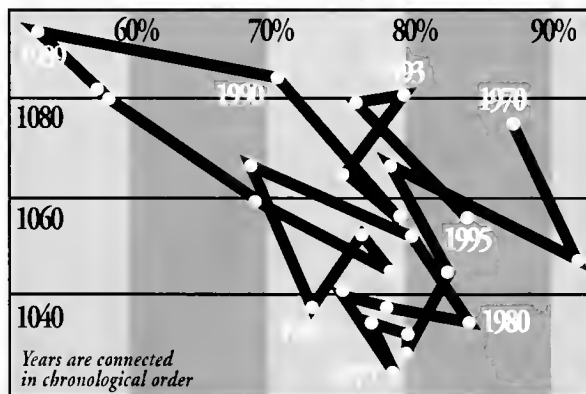

There is one point all friends of Hampden-Sydney should keep in mind: planning is not only about today, tomorrow, and the day after. We must also keep in mind 10, 20, and even 25 years ahead. We should recognize that the effects of some decisions made today will be felt in 2005, 2015, and 2020! The stakes are high. Readers of The Record will be informed at every step as we follow the twisting road that takes us into the future.

"While the choice of a model for the long-term planning of the College is undoubtedly important, it is far more important to be prepared to meet with confidence the fluctuating applications which are part and parcel of the business of higher education."

RELATION BETWEEN ACCEPTANCE RATE (%)

"Common sense tells us that . . . SAT averages and class ranks should be high when acceptance rate is low and vice versa. [This chart] shows that while this may be true when the acceptance rate is low, high acceptance rates do not automatically translate into low SAT averages. . . . Some very good classes have come when the acceptance rate was as high as 70%. . . . [I]mprovement in selectivity may work toward improved class statistics but in no way guarantees them."

FOLLOWING A NATIONWIDE search, Anita H. Garland was appointed, in March, Hampden-Sydney College's Dean of Admissions.

A native of Roanoke, Garland is a graduate of Westhampton College of the University of Richmond and holds an MBA from Virginia Commonwealth University. She was assistant director of admissions and later director of grant development for Randolph-Macon College in Ashland before coming to Hampden-Sydney in 1980. Named associate dean of admissions in 1981, she was named Director of Admissions in 1989. She has served as Hampden-Sydney College's acting dean of admissions twice, for several months after her arrival and again after Dean Robert H. Jones entered semi-retirement last year. Her most recent appointment makes her the first woman in the history of Hampden-Sydney to serve as a dean.

In nearly two decades of work with recruitment and admissions, Garland has been "through the wooden doors of the public schools in the hollows of Buffalo Gap and behind the armored fences of the elite private schools in the city of New York." In her visits to just about every place, she has learned the market; she knows what's out there and where to find the best kind of student most likely to belong here.

She is very pleased with our new public relations initiative and its decision to develop a college-wide marketing plan to coordinate the efforts of all offices. She is also improving recruiting procedures for the Admissions Office. With the College's upgraded attention to "customer satisfaction," she believes that Hampden-Sydney's admissions and retention picture will remain bright.

Garland believes we should put more emphasis on Hampden-Sydney's strengths, one of which is its ability to attract good students in the first place. Compared to similar schools, the College gets more than its rightful share of top-of-the-classes, for whom Hampden-Sydney is the "very place for them to continue to develop their talents." One of Hampden-Sydney's most valuable contributions, however, is in developing the young man who, for one reason or another, has not performed to his potential: "He is the one over whom parents furrow their brows and because of whom guidance counselors take aspirin; who has the 'stuff,' but has not yet realized it. Those men come here with no idea how to spell Thucydides, and graduate quoting him. To me, that is our artistry, refining the superb students and sculpting those who aren't quite formed."

Because she feels that Hampden-Sydney needs to spread the word about its "special talents," her first goal as Dean is to enlarge the College's admissions volunteer program. Although trustees and alumni have always helped to increase the yield (the number of accepted students who attend), the campaign for applicants must now become a deliberate effort by alumni, students, parents, and trustees. She plans to spread the word at the grassroots level, "with people talking to other people in their community about Hampden-Sydney."

Her simple plan: "I hope that each of you will ask the high school student who bags your groceries or sits in your Sunday School classes, 'Have you thought about Hampden-Sydney?' Once the student shows interest, please let us know his name. We'll write him. But our volunteers must follow up with him, too, especially encouraging him to visit the campus for an interview."

Garland points out that if each alumnus recruited only one student applicant every seven years, from that source alone the College would receive more applications than at any time in its history. "Then imagine how the effort would work if everyone—students, current parents, past parents, trustees, and friends—did the same," she adds. "Nothing would make me happier than to have to hire extra 'readers' for applications."

Beyond her charm (many prospective students have been captured by her friendly notes on follow-up letters, signed in her distinctive script) Garland's infectious enthusiasm for Hampden-Sydney has given life to the College's admissions program. "There is so little diversity in higher education today," she affirms.

"But God bless the mavericks—those places that offer what no one else can. I'm proud to be working for one of them."

Arieti and Wilson win prizes

IN A PROGRAM THAT AWARDS at most 100 prizes annually to colleges, universities, and schools of theology worldwide, Professors James A. Arieti and Patrick A. Wilson have each won a $10,000 award this year from the John Templeton Foundation for their proposed courses in science and religion. The Templeton Foundation seeks to encourage the teaching of interdisciplinary courses in science and religion around the world. Of each $10,000 award, $5,000 is given to the institution and $5,000 is awarded to the instructor. Arieti's course, "Science and Religion: A Challenge Ancient and Modern," to be offered in Hampden-Sydney's 1997 May term, will explore the issues in the relationship of religion and science that thinkers have pondered since the invention of science in the West by the Milesian natural philosophers. In his interdisciplinary course, Wilson will address the religious implications of the latest advances in cosmology and evolution theory and explore the methodological commitments of both theistic and naturalistic views.

- William Anderson (Chemistry) and Roxann Prazniak (History) presented a lecture on "Science and Civilization: Comparative Development of the West and China," in November, as part of the Hampden-Sydney College Honors Lectures Series. The lecture was a result of the Honors Seminar class that the two team-taught last year.

In his research, he was led to a cache of the Baba's manuscripts, letters, and photographs. Carney is also completing a chapter on Hinduism for an introductory world religions textbook.

Commonwealth's place in national politics from the 1930s to the 1960s. Arguably the only person willing to tackle the massive collection of Byrd papers at the University of Virginia, Heinemann was able, finally, to bring together under one cover the story of the man and the history he made.

- In November, Vincent Iverson, James Janowski, and Patrick Wilson (Philosophy) attended the 54th annual meeting of the Virginia Philosophical Association, where Janowski presented his paper, "Associative Obligations and Legitimacy."

- James Janowski (Philosophy) participated in the Mid-South Philosophy Conference in Memphis in February. The paper he presented, "Fanaticism and the Politics of Education," was the product of last fall's collaboration with a colleague at Illinois State University.

- Hans Krimm (Physics & Astronomy) attended the Third Huntsville Symposium on Gamma Ray Bursts, in Huntsville, Alabama, last October. The meeting, which attracted nearly 200 physicists and astronomers from around the world, focused on the mystery of gamma-ray bursts, which are brief, bright flashes of gamma rays from as-yet-unknown sources beyond the solar system, and most likely beyond the galaxy. Discussions centered on the latest data from the Burst and Transient Source Experiment (BATSE) and questions about the distances to burst locations and the mechanisms by which the bursts are produced. Krimm presented one paper and was co-author of another, both of them about searches for counterparts to these bursts at other energies. He also discussed with several scientists ways in which the Hampden-Sydney telescope could be used to search for burst counterparts.

- Amos Lee Laine and Ronald Heinemann (History) attended the 61st annual meeting of the Southern Historical Association in New Orleans, in November. Laine was a commentator for the meeting's special session on Tudor history, "Crime, Corruption, and the Local Order in Early Tudor England"; the topic drew papers from three Tudor historians from California and were read during a local run-off race for governor of Louisiana.

- Ken Lehman (History) is publishing a volume in the "United States and the Americas" series of the University of Georgia Press.

- Drawings by David Lewis (Fine Arts) from his "Camera" series have been juried into national competitions in Wisconsin, Texas, Florida, and Tennessee; in the 1996 Stockton National Exhibition, at the Haggin Museum, Stockton, California; The Second Great Plains National, at Fort Hays State University, Hays, Kansas; Form & Metaphor-National Art Exhibition, at Eastern New Mexico University; and The American Drawing Biennial V, at the Muscarelle Museum of the College of William & Mary (where he won first place).

One was exhibited in a national show at the Berkeley (California) Art Center, and one appeared in a national juried exhibition at Gallery 84 in New York. The drawings won several awards, including the Best in Show in an exhibition in Hampton, Virginia. Lewis's exhibition on America Online® opened in February. Interested cyber-surfers can log on to AOL and then go to the key word: Rogue.

- Dan Mossler (Psychology) and D. K. Boland of the University of Wisconsin are conducting a study of college students' attitudes toward homosexuals. Mossler and Boland found that negative attitudes toward homosexuals correlated with more general prejudices toward minority races and with a general complex of rigid attitudes termed by psychologists "authoritarianism." These trends seem particularly strong in males. Suggestive of the thesis that homophobia is a deeper and darker phenomenon than often acknowledged, the paper stimulated much comment.

- Tryon Press of Chapel Hill has published a book of poems, Sun, Moon & Stars, by Tom O'Grady (English). The work is praised by poets Patricia Goedicke, David Ignatow, and Katherine Soniat for its deep perceptions, passion, and quiet intensity. The book features watercolor illustrations by local artist Deborah McClintock.

- Roxann Prazniak (History) has published Dialogues Across Civilizations, the culmination of twelve years of work. The book sets the histories of China and Europe alongside one another, juxtaposing the East's and West's perceptions of the same ideas and historical events. Through this juxtaposition, Chinese and European civilizations illuminate each other's achievements, problems, and limitations in a range of areas from urban history to religious faith.

- In October, Bob Rogers (Religion) led "Choices for the 21st Century," a regional public reading and discussion series sponsored by the Nottoway County Libraries. On four consecutive Wednesday nights, he helped a group of people from around Southside Virginia consider what challenges face the United States in the coming century, what America is, and what we want it to become. "Choices," part of a national project to involve citizens in the discussion of such questions, is supported by the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities.

- An essay by James Schiffer (English), "Mnemonic Cues to Passion in Hamlet" was accepted, in October, for publication in Renaissance Papers: 1995. Schiffer originally wrote the essay for a Folger Institute Weekend Seminar in November 1994 on "Shakespeare and the Art of Memory," directed by Stephen Greenblatt; he presented a shortened version at the Southeastern Renaissance Conference at the University of Virginia in March 1995. A second essay, "Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis: A Lacanian Tragicomedy of Desire," was published in a collection of essays on Venus and Adonis, by Garland Press early in 1996. He is also editing a critical anthology on Shakespeare's Sonnets in the same Garland series.

- William Shear, Patterson Professor of Biology, inaugurated a new series sponsored by the Rhetoric Program. "Teachers Talking About Writing," on November 8. Ronald Heinemann, Squires Professor of History, gave the second talk in the series. Shear also published an article, "Cold-Tolerant Annuals Make a Bountiful Spring," in the January-February issue of Fine Gardening.

- Wayne Tucker (Classics) attended the Ohio Classical Conference in October. The conference's theme was mythology and its uses in modern literature, music, and art; the title of Tucker's address, "Why Weep for Hecuba?" comes from lines spoken by Hamlet.

- Alex Werth (Biology) won a Mednick Fellowship to support his continuing study, this summer, of the feeding mechanisms of the bowhead whale. Since 1989, Werth has conducted research in Barrow, Alaska, and at the School of Veterinary Medicine at LSU, to name two sites, and constructed scale and mathematical models of bowhead anatomy and physiology. He presented a paper on his research at the American Society of Zoologists conference in December 1995.

- Patrick Wilson (Philosophy) read his paper, "Why Leslie's Doomsday Argument Is Doomed," at the Institute for Liberal Studies conference on science and culture at Kentucky State University in April. He has been accepted into three NEH Summer Institutes and will be attending the one entitled "New Perspectives on Classical Antiquity" at the University of Arizona.

Gone

- David Kaye (Fine Arts-Theatre) has accepted a position at the University of New Hampshire, where he will teach advanced courses in acting and will design a directing concentration in the school's existing theatre program. Kaye has taught theatre at Hampden-Sydney for three years; he organized this year's symposium on the American Dream.

On leave

- Roger Barrus (Political Science) has taken a one-year leave from Hampden-Sydney to become dean of faculty at a new college created by the Mormon Church from the former Southern Virginia College in Buena Vista.

- Alan Ford Farrell (Modern languages), a professor respected and remembered with affection even by the students he flunked in his French literature course, has taken a two-year leave of absence. In February he was appointed acting dean of faculty at Virginia Military Institute, by Superintendent Josiah Bunting III. A member of the Hampden-Sydney faculty since 1973, Farrell has taught French, rhetoric, Francophone literature, and medieval epic poetry here. He has published essays and presented papers at meetings, in this country and abroad, and written translations of poetry and fiction that captured the rhythm and power of the original words. He was chair of the department for several terms, and did the usual tours of committee duty. During the summers, he taught in the Dartmouth Intensive Language Program under John Rassias.

Farrell is also a soldier; having chosen in 1968 (armed with a Trinity College degree) to go as an enlisted man to Viet Nam, he served with the Fifth Special Forces, was wounded and decorated for military valor, and remained a member of the Army Reserve for many years. The story of his return to Viet Nam in 1990, "To Know the Place for the First Time," won a CASE (Council for the Advancement and Support of Education) silver medal in 1992. The gentleman-scholar-soldier was decorated again at Commencement in 1993, when, dressed in his Reserve uniform, Sargeant Major Farrell accepted one of the first John Brooks Fuqua teaching awards.

Savvy in the ways of young men, "Sargeant Rock" sought to teach by example. "If I am any good as a teacher, a real teacher," he once told a group of fraternity brothers, "what I expect of you in class and what I do outside of class is all I have to say. If you study as and what I tell you and if you live a life as I have lived it and do live it, then I can't ask any more of you." Demanding no more of them than of himself, he has turned more than a few "gentlemen" of Hampden-Sydney into good citizens—and good people.

Staff news

- Mary Herdegen, Curator of the Esther Thomas Atkinson Museum, completed a forty-hour workshop sponsored by the Center for Museum Studies of the Smithsonian Institution. From a nationwide pool of applicants, she was one of 16 participants accepted into the five-day course, "Introduction to Museum Management," which focused on strategic planning, facility management, human resource management, marketing, fund-raising, and partnerships and consortia. The group of participants was diverse as were the various regions, institutions, and collections they represented.

- College Chaplain William Thompson presented a paper on the Westminster Shorter Catechism at the Eighth International Colloquium on John Calvin Studies, held on the campus of Davidson College on January 26 and 27. He also was a member of a panel of seminary and university professors discussing "The Relevance of the Westminster Confession for Today."

Spring sports round-up

By Dean Hybl, Sports Information Director

LED BY THE PLAY OF SENIOR Berk Jolly and junior David Egerton, the Tiger golf team held off a tough challenge from Washington & Lee and Guilford to earn the ODAC Golf Championship—the first conference championship for the Tigers since 1986.

Jolly earned medalist honors with a two-day total of 149. He won thanks to a two-shot advantage gained on the first day; his opening round score was 73. Egerton posted an opening round of 75 and added a 78 on day two to finish tied for third place with a two-day total of 153. Both were named to the All-Tournament team.

The Tiger team posted an opening round of 306 to hold a two-stroke lead over defending champion Washington & Lee and four-stroke advantage over Guilford. On day two, all three teams posted identical rounds of 310 as H-SC maintained its two-stroke advantage.

A pair of senior veterans, John Rosenbaum and Pat McManamy also came through with key rounds on the second day of the tournament. Rosenbaum fired a second round 77 while McManamy carded a round of 79 to give H-SC four golfers with rounds in the seventies.

Following his outstanding performance, Jolly was honored as the ODAC "Golfer of the Year" and also became the first Hampden-Sydney golfer to earn All-ODAC honors four times. Tiger golf coach Bill Tornabene was also honored as the ODAC "Coach of the Year."

LACROSSE

SEASON RECORD: 10-4 overall, 3-3 in ODAC

Though they completed the season with a tough loss to 7th-ranked Roanoke College, the desire and determination displayed by the Tigers in the contest makes them losers only on the scoreboard. In a game in which the team was not playing for an NCAA appearance or a conference title and in which they had several opportunities to lie down, the Tigers fought to the very end and nearly pulled off a very significant come-from-behind upset.

Roanoke scored four goals in the first eight minutes of the game and appeared prepared to run away from the struggling Tigers. However, the H-SC defense responded with some big stops and the Tiger offense eventually got H-SC back in contention.

Roanoke led 7-4 at intermission and 8-4 early in the third period when the Tigers made their run. Defender T.W. Johnson opened the stretch with a break-away goal and his play seemed to energize the Tigers while shocking the Maroons. Joe Turco added a goal and an assist and Chamie Burroughs had consecutive goals to knot the score with twenty minutes remaining in the contest.

The Maroons again stormed ahead with a pair of quick goals, but Burroughs and Turco responded to tie the score at 10-10 with 11:39 remaining in the contest. Hunter McCaa gave H-SC its only lead of the day with an excellent one-on-one goal with 10:16 remaining. The Tigers had several chances to increase their advantage, but were never successful and the Maroons again tied the score with 8:07 remaining.

Roanoke grabbed the lead with 5:43 remaining, but Turco scored less than a minute later to tie the game for the final time. Over the final minutes, H-SC had several scoring opportunities, but were unable to score the go-ahead goal. Roanoke eventually gained possession and pulled ahead on a goal with 1:21 remaining. H-SC had a chance in the final seconds, but the Maroon goalie made a big play to end the game and preserve the victory.

Burroughs finished the game with four goals for H-SC while Turco added three goals and two assists. Pete Sheffield had two goals against Roanoke and finished the season as H-SC's team leader with 55 points. Turco was second with 54 points, including 34 assists for the third highest single-season assist total in school history. In an outstanding freshman campaign, Burroughs finished as the team leader with 40 goals and added 45 total points. He had five games with four or more goals and was H-SC's top scorer in each of the final five games of the season. Freshman Doug Palmer also had an outstanding freshman campaign as he was fourth on the squad in scoring with 21 goals and 31 total points. Senior Chris DiCicco was H-SC's top faceoff midfielder and also displayed a scoring punch with 16 goals and 24 points.

Defense was a major strength of the Tiger squad throughout the year as H-SC held opponents to an average of 9.2 goals per game and held eight opponents below double digits in scoring. Sophomore Jamie Worthen was the leader of the unit and also led the ODAC with 172 ground balls. Senior T.J. Doremus and freshman goalie Scott Ketcham also enjoyed solid seasons for the Tiger defense.

Following the season, seniors Pete Sheffield and T.J. Doremus and sophomore Jamie Worthen were honored as first team All-ODAC selections. Worthen was also named an honorable-mention All-America selection.

BASEBALL

SEASON RECORD: 5-19-1 overall, 3-12-1 in ODAC

Timely hitting was the Achilles heel of the squad as they struggled to score runs. H-SC finished with a respectable team batting average of .282, but averaged only 5.4 runs per game as they left an average of eight runners on base per contest. The pitching staff was much improved over the 1995 season as they lowered their team ERA by more than a run and allowed their opponents to reach double figures only eight times, compared to 16 a year ago. However, the staff was also inconsistent and lacked depth. The Tigers ended a tough season with a pair of close losses at Emory & Henry—the last of 11 losses by four or fewer runs, including seven losses by one or two runs.

One player who enjoyed a tremendous campaign for the Tigers was sophomore second baseman Jason Keefer, who finished the year as the leading hitter in the ODAC with a .446 batting average. He posted 13 multi-hit games and drove home 12 runs while scoring 17 times. For his accomplishments, Keefer was honored as a first team All-ODAC selection.

Another consistent offensive performer was sophomore centerfielder Gary Walton. An outstanding defensive performer as well as a strong offensive force, Walton was second on the team with a .330 batting average and was also second on the squad with 16 runs driven in. Walton showed offensive power with three home runs and also scored 17 runs. First baseman Brian Adams also enjoyed a solid season. Adams finished with a .311 batting average while scoring 16 runs and driving home eight runs. A solid fielder, Adams committed only four errors while posting a .982 fielding percentage. Among the pitchers, freshman Walt Bondurant was the most productive. Though he

TENNIS

SEASON RECORD: 11-3 overall, 7-1 in ODAC

The Tiger tennis team entered the final day of the ODAC Championships with a chance at the title, but was unable to overcome perennial champion Washington & Lee. H-SC and W&L players met in eight of nine individual flight championships; the Generals won seven of the eight matches to finish the tournament nine points ahead of the second-place Tigers.

Junior Brett Eckley was the only Tiger to earn an individual conference title, at the number four singles spot, with a 6-1, 6-4 victory in the finals.

Though he did not win the conference title, number one player Bill Wainscott dominated defending confer-

Number-three player Will Bryan, number-five man Ryan Gravender, and number-six man Jeremy Graybill all reached the finals of their singles flights before falling to their W&L opponent.

In doubles, the Tigers reached the finals in all three flights, but were again unable to defeat the Generals. The only close match was at the number one spot where Wainscott and Bryan claimed the first set in a tiebreaker before losing the final three sets.

The ODAC Tournament marked the final weekend for Mike Reilly as Tiger tennis coach. Reilly, who is leaving H-SC to become the head soccer coach at Elon College, led H-SC to a 44-4 dual match record and three second-place finishes in the conference tournament during four years at the helm.

At right: The 1995-96 basketball season was highlighted by the squad's five-day trip to Puerto Rico in late December. They eked out a 77-75 victory over the University of Puerto Rico at Arecibo but lost to UPR-Mayaguez, 62-59. The Tigers finished the season with a 17-9 record and reached the ODAC semifinals. Seniors Nate Schwab and Ryan Odom each earned second-team All-ODAC honors; Schwab finished his career fifth on the Tigers' career scoring chart with 1,630 points. Odom, H-SC's all-time leader in three-point baskets, ended his career ranked 18th with 1,162 career points.

As a student at H-SC and later in grad school at Virginia Tech, DAVID E. (Dee) LAIRD, JR., '62 worked in the summers at a ranch in Montana and thought often about acting in a Western movie "one day." Now, with 29 years of landscape-nursery business in his holster, he has begun his career in film. In 1994, after a honeymoon in Egypt with his wife Ann, Dee sold the business in Hanover County and headed West to Sante Fe, just because "we wanted to see how it was to live in the West." This past autumn, he heard that a Western was being filmed near them; Dee signed up, and, he reports, "damned if they didn't call me!" Although he has no speaking lines in the television series (which began as a two-hour made-for-television movie), he appears in close background shots. Chosen for the part because "they needed somebody who looked scruffy" for a story set late in the 1860s, the long-haired, bearded cowboy says he is probably unrecognizable on the screen. But keep watching, fellow alumni. Says Dee: "I've gotten so interested in it, I'm trying to get more substantial roles." He hopes to "get to do some riding" as a cavalryman, perhaps shaven and shorn.

C. Kemper Lorraine '48

[From an article by Jim Mason in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, March 1, 1996. Reprinted with permission.]

It was a two-month going-out-of-business sale. At the end, it was a giveaway, to Habitat for Humanity.

And so ended 65 years in Carytown as Lorraine Hardware Store at 3114 W. Cary St. closed its doors for good on February 29, 1996.

"We didn't want to sell the business," said Charles K. Lorraine, Sr., the second-generation owner. What they did instead was discount everything in the store and what they didn't sell at half price, they donated.

"Everybody benefits," said Tim Holtz, executive director of Richmond Metropolitan Habitat for Humanity, who was there as volunteers were taking things down and carting them out to a truck. "The Lorraines have a way of going out on a positive note."

Some of Lorraine's goods will be used in new Habitat-built homes, while others will help outfit a brick warehouse at 1400 W. Marshall Street. "This is a boost we could never have imagined we'd have when it comes to outfitting the warehouse," Holtz said.

"It has not been a distress sale," Lorraine said. No, big chain stores such as Lowe's and Home Quarters hadn't driven Lorraine's out of business. "I'm 69. There's a time for everything, including retirement. We want to go ahead and do some things we've been wanting to do, like traveling."

His father, Alfred L. Lorraine, began the business in 1931 when he bought a hardware store that had gone bankrupt a block to the east for $500. In 1936, his father decided he needed more room and built the one-story brick building that has been Lorraine's Hardware ever since. "I was 9 years old when I started working in the store part time. I was paid 10 cents a day," Lorraine said. "I've found out since I was overpaid."

Also at the store on closing day were three longtime customers.

"Hey, that's something

I ought to have," Dr. Frederic P. Moore II said to his wife Jane, pointing to a galvanized mop pail fitted with a built-in wringer.

"OK, Libbie, what do you want for this?" the retired pediatrician asked Elizabeth Lorraine.

"Thirty dollars less 50 percent," replied Mrs. Lorraine, a retired Capitol Hill aide and one-time administrative assistant for state affairs for former Senator Paul Triple.

Moore snapped it up.

"I hate to see this store close," the doctor said.

"Me, too," said Charles F. Treanor, a retired General Electric sales manager and Hampden-Sydney classmate of Charles Lorraine. After he retired, Treanor used to work part-time at the store.

For the hardware's last day, Cynthia Burritt [an employee] carted a sign over from The Print Shack across the street.

"Store Closed," it says in black. Below that is a caricature of Charles Lorraine holding a big fish in his arms. And below that, "We have retired. Thank you for your business over the years."

ALUMNI PROFILE:

Dan Jenkin '89

One evening last fall, Dan Jenkin and a Czech colleague were getting acquainted over a glass of cognac. As he would at an American ice-breaking ritual, Jenkin asked his guest—in Jenkin's newly-learned Czech—if he had any hobbies. "He was probably a bit worried there for a minute," Jenkin surmises of the Czech's reaction to his question. "Turns out I had actually asked him if he had a rectum."

His verbal blunder reminded Jenkin, a volunteer for the Advanced Business Development Sector of the Peace Corps in Czechoslovakia, that he had far more to learn from the Czechs than he would ever teach them. For a start, the complexities of the Czech language and culture are not easily grasped. Even simple responses to questions can be misconstrued: "The word for 'yes' in Czech is 'ano,' and the people have simplified it to 'no,' so you can imagine the confusion when you get the response, "No, 'no, 'no,' with an affirmative nod."

Before the humbling experience with social patter, Jenkin and other Peace Corps volunteers spent four hours a day in language study, two in technical training, and two in cultural education. They learned "how Czech people eat carp at Christmas, pick wild mushrooms in the fall, and find it rude if one removes one's shoes in public." They discovered, too, an old, "very industrious" people whose economy had been paralyzed by 44 years of communist policies; a renewal of economic efforts by Prime Minister Václav Klaus; and the humanitarian diplomacy of dissident playwright-turned-President Václav Havel.

"The Czech Republic," says Jenkin, "is now the most advanced of all post-communist countries in Eastern Europe and operates with a balanced economic budget. The Czech people have the motivation and efficiency in their blood, and you can see it in their work and community more and more every day. Alas, the phones don't work, hours are short, and everything is 'impossible'—remnants of communism and a bureaucracy that would make Washington look like a model of efficiency."

Jenkin is there to share knowledge about Western business practices, not bureaucracy. He gives seminars on Western marketing techniques and production systems planning and teaches an economics class (in English with a Czech interpreter—lucky for him); he works for a small consulting organization specializing in small- and medium-sized business development.

He laments that "there's nothing like the Blue Ridge Mountains in October, the salt air on the Chesapeake Bay, D.C., Boulder, Williamsburg, the Colorado Rockies, the Grateful Dead—and sitting around with good friends." But he is developing a taste for the work of Kafka, Kundera, and Capek; he has the mountains of Poland, Germany, Slovakia, and Austria to wander in. The people he walks among or works with raise flowers and vegetables at their weekend cottages, watch hockey and soccer games, play tennis and rugby, recycle plastic and paper, and complain about the old government or the new one. So, while the language may stump him occasionally, he is not so far from home after all.

Springsteen and REM to bring their acts to Virginia Beach. Many of the national stars and a number of regional groups appear at "Bessie's Boathouse," the pop music temple Reid created in 1983 from a dilapidated barn near the Elizabeth River. In 1984, he helped to oversee President Reagan's second inaugural ball in Washington. ### College Family

Miss ELIZABETH CARRINGTON EGGLESTON died on November 30, 1995, at Westminster-Canterbury House in Lynchburg, where she had lived since 1982. Descended through both her parents from most of the founders of Hampden-Sydney College, Miss Eggleston was born on March 17, 1899, a daughter of the late Dr. Joseph D. Eggleston, President of Hampden-Sydney College from 1919 to 1939, and Julia Johnson Eggleston. She was a graduate of Sweet Briar College and earned a Master's degree from Syracuse University; she also studied for a year at Oxford University. A poet and artist, she lived most of her adult life at Hampden-Sydney, where she was a vital part of the College community; she is probably best remembered for establishing the Globe Theater in the (now-demolished) kitchen building at Penshurst, where local children and grown-ups presented Shakespeare and Greek tragedies with elaborate puppets of their own manufacture. Her famous music-appreciation evenings opened new artistic vistas for many students. In 1967, she was honored by the College with the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Medallion for her remarkable ability to stimulate creativity in people of all ages.

Mrs. JULIA LOWERY SIMMS, widow of long-time Hampden-Sydney volunteer trainer Dr. Gilman Simms '30 and mother of Walter and Scott Simms, died on January 21, 1996, in Farmville.

You love your retirement plans. So does the IRS.

Do you know who will benefit from your carefully accumulated retirement plans after you are gone?

Your spouse? Your children? Other worthy beneficiaries?

READ ON, BECAUSE YOU MAY BE IN FOR SOME UNPLEASANT SURPRISES, THANKS TO IRS SMALL PRINT.

As is generally recognized, the asset balance in your retirement account(s) can pass substantially untaxed (except for the excess accumulations tax) to your spouse or to a charitable beneficiary such as Hampden-Sydney College.

Naming a beneficiary other than your spouse or a charity, however, will subject the assets in your retirement account to several taxes—which could deprive your beneficiary of up to 90% of the asset value.

What are these taxes?

- Federal estate taxes start at 37% for estates over $600,000 and increase rapidly to over 50%, depending on the amount of state taxes.
- Income taxes—known as Income in Respect of Decedent—must be paid by the beneficiary (ies). They include federal, state, and local taxes. Depending on where your beneficiaries live, taxes may easily exceed 40% of the assets.

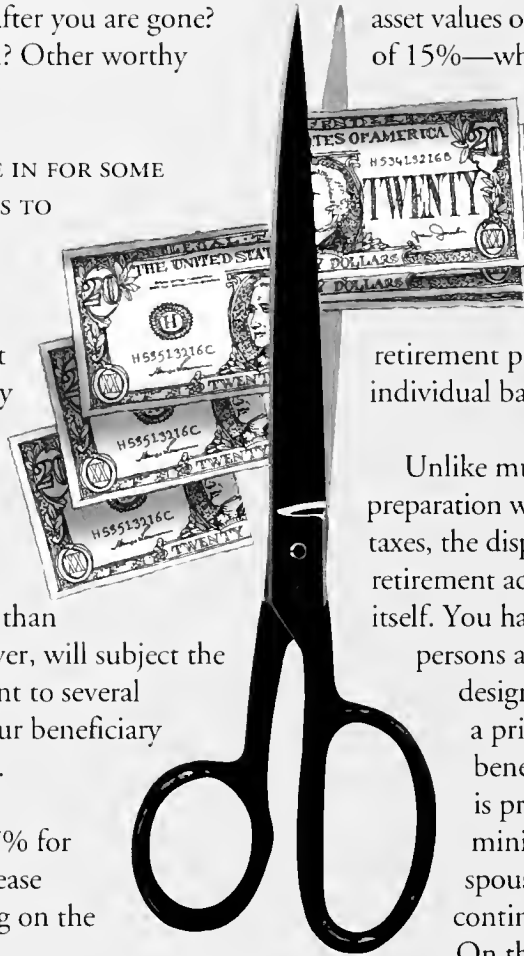

- The Excess Accumulations Tax, on accumulated asset values over about $1.5 million, is a punitive tax of 15%—which is unavoidable by you, by your surviving spouse, by any other heirs, or even by a charitable beneficiary.

How do you determine what impact all of this taxation would have on your situation? This will depend on the size of your estate and the amount accumulated in your retirement plan(s), and must be analyzed on an individual basis.

Unlike much of the estate planning and preparation which must be undertaken to minimize taxes, the disposition of the assets remaining in your retirement account(s) after your death is simplicity itself. You have already named some person or persons as beneficiaries on a beneficiary designation form. You were asked to name a primary beneficiary and a contingent beneficiary(ies). If your spouse or a charity is primary beneficiary, taxes are minimized. The same applies if your spouse is primary and a charity a contingent beneficiary.

On the other hand, any other designation, such as to your children, will encounter substantial taxation. Changing your present designations requires only completing and signing a change of beneficiary or a new beneficiary designation form.

You should consult your tax advisor to determine how taxes will affect your case. In the meantime, if you wish to discuss the material above or ask questions before consulting a tax advisor, you can call George Peters at Hampden-Sydney, toll-free at 1- (800) 865-1776.

FOR FISCAL YEAR
1995-96

1995-96

“At Hampden-Sydney, our most important task other than teaching and learning is to continue to strengthen and improve our sense of direction for the future—our vision for the next five, ten, twenty-five years and beyond—as well as the strategy to support that vision in the troubled world of the twenty-first century.

And that highlights our critical need for resources. Money—the money to do the things we must do, if we are to continue to fulfill our promise of almost two and a quarter centuries ago, if we are to keep pace in the next century.

You alumni, parents, and friends have dug down deep and helped us as you’ve never helped before.

For that we are profoundly grateful, and for that you should be proud as well.

The return on your investment in our College, recall, is the “Hampden-Sydney Man”—the good man and good citizen, the bulwark of society that our pre-Revolutionary founders dreamed and talked about, the kind of man today’s society needs so desperately.”
